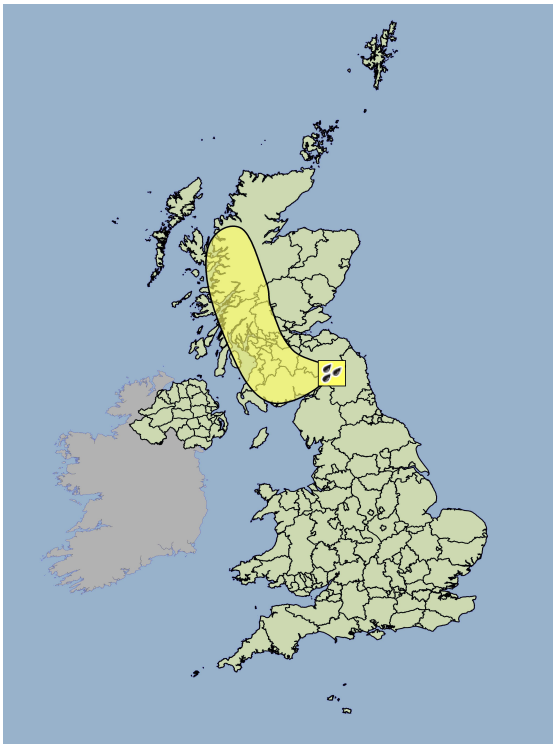
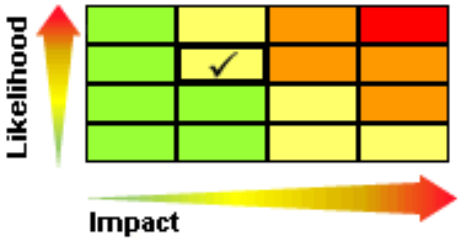
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A set of Atlantic fronts is bringing a spell of wet and windy weather to much of Scotland today. The heaviest rain will be found in parts of Western and Central Scotland where another 20-30mm is likely, with perhaps 40mm in hilly areas. This will be enough to bring a good deal of surface water and spray to roads, and a risk of localised minor flooding in prone areas. South to southwesterly winds will also reach gale force, and while locally severe gales are possible, the main concern with wind comes later in the week, for which separate warnings have been issued.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 12:00 on Wed, 07th Jan 2015 until 20:00 on Wed, 07th Jan 2015

Outbreaks of rain will continue to be heavy at times on Wednesday afternoon and into the early evening. There will be a good deal of surface water and spray on roads with the chance of localised surface water flooding in prone spots. In addition there is the possibility of minor river flooding in parts of the western Borders. The more persistent rain will clear to showers during the evening. The public should be aware of the risk of difficult driving conditions.
